Introduction

Until 1949 Shanghai was the pre-eminent centre of Chinese-flag shipowning. It was the headquarters of the leading shipowners' association and also of the state-owned China Merchants Steam Navigation Company. By May 1949 as the People's Liberation Army encircled Shanghai, most units of the shipping fleets as well as their owners had sought refuge in either Hong Kong or Taiwan leaving behind reportedly only 23 ships of 34,000 tons (economy.guoxue.com). It therefore became a huge challenge to reassemble by April 1950 a state-owned China People's Steam Navigation Company (CPSNC) coastal fleet from remaining, damaged and sunken vessels, or from private owners or crews who could be enticed or coerced to bringing back their ships. These were supplemented by a few disguised flag-of-convenience purchases by the People's Republic, which, if used on domestic services, were as a rule placed under the PRC flag.

Shanghai Maritime Bureau and 'Hoping' series

From the outset, Shanghai became the main focus of these efforts, and also in re-establishing services with North China. In March 1951, during a second national shipping conference held in Beijing, the Ministry of Communications announced the division of the centralized CPSNC into three regional operations, namely Beiyang [North China] District, East China (Shanghai and Yangtze) and South China (Guangzhou) Maritime Administrations. In May 1953 the East China and Beiyang administrations were combined into a Shanghai Maritime Bureau (SMB), which thereby became the largest and most important of these structures. The South China Maritime Administration was also upgraded to a Bureau. Its continued separation acknowledged the reality that South China was cut off by sea from Shanghai and the North by the U.S.-backed Nationalist blockade enforced from Taiwan. While the blockade has long since been lifted, the Guangzhou Maritime Bureau has retained its independence.

The Shanghai Bureau's efforts intensified from 1952 when the Central Government began to implement socialism by expunging remnant foreign ownership and also private Chinese ownership such as Hoong On S.N. Co. and Chung Hsing Steamship Co. (q.v.) which went through shortlived transitions as public-private ventures. Cancellation by Panama of Chinese flag-of-convenience registry in August 1952 led to twelve such ships, which had been acquired in the preceding three years, being brought under the Chinese flag. As the Shanghai Bureau gradually took over vessels, they were renamed, from about 1954, in a numerical 'Hoping' (Pingyin: Héping) ('Peace' - 和平) series, which early in the Cultural Revolution were all renamed in the 'Zhandou' ('Combat' - 战斗) series. South China Bureau vessels similarly took on numerical 'Nan Hai' ('South Sea' - 南海) and (from 1967) 'Hong Qi' ('Red Flag' - 红旗) nomenclatures.

Ship Types

The initial 'Hoping' fleet, with ships numbered in descending order of size, combined the former Panamanian flag vessels with the few ships remaining in Chinese waters of such owners as China Merchants (mainly small warbuilts which had been obtained from the United States), Dah Loh, Chung Hsing and W.H. Eddie Hsu. The former Panamanian vessels and the Hoping 1, built at Bremen in 1921 as the Liebfels, were perhaps rather large for coastal service in the early years. Under the new regime, the ships were generally well looked after and number of them were eventually given visible structural refits in Shanghai yards. Each vessel was now required to carry an additional officer to look after the political health of the ship, and there were probably other standing requirements for extra personnel. Typical alterations involved fitting new masts, cargo gear and funnels, and enclosing the superstructure, usually with plating which gave a more modern impression and provided the extra accommodation space. Remarkably, the carefully maintained ex-Liebfels, a former warbuilt 'Liberty' ship and even some World War I veterans were still sailing in 1982 as 'Zhandou's.

After 1955, beginning with Hoping 18, came 6 Finnish-built 3200-dwt 'Khasan' class colliers that had been ordered as reparations for the USSR, then 7 Polish-built 5000-dwt, 'B-31'-type colliers from the Gdansk (formerly Danzig) yard and 4 smaller 'B-32'-type from the Szczecin (formerly Stettin) yard, then in 1958 two 5500-dwt 'Kolomna'-type from the Neptun yard in Rostok, East Germany. Two further 'Kolomna'-type and one more B-32 for the Guangzhou Bureau were listed briefly with 'Hoping' names under Shanghai Bureau ownership. In 1956 two 1200 gt 'Tissa/Telnovsk' class cargo ships, Hoping 25 and Hoping 26 were reported ordered from the Gheorghiu Dej yard in Budapest, but they were completed for Soviet ownership and two more such vessels were substituted [W. Schell]. These became the Qian Shao 2 and Qian Shao 3 and appear as such in our list; we do not know if they ever bore 'Hoping' names.

'Khasan' class ('Black Sisters from Turku').

The 'Khasan' class were each initially registered under the Finnish flag with female names beginning in "R" for their delivery voyage. The Polish-built 'B-31' colliers were each registered under the Soviet flag for the delivery voyage, with the names Chaplygin, Chausy, Chekalin, Ekimchan, Imar, Penzhino and Tigil. On arrival in China each was renamed with a 'Hoping' name. The 'B-31's became 'Hopings' followed by the numerals 23, 24, 32, 36, 37, 38 and 39, but the exact pairings of the Russian and 'Hoping' names are not available [W. Schell].

The Soviet Penzhino on her way out to China, where she became a 'Hoping', but which 'Hoping' is unclear. Photo taken in April 1957 at Cape Town (R. M. Scott/W. Schell).

The largest newly-built ships for this fleet were eight 7,000 dwt China coaster-type vessels built in China 1958-64, although reported information has been sparse and sometimes conflicting. Each showed variation in appearance, and photographs of all are presented below. The details presented involve best guesses, sometimes heavily based on the photographs, and may contain errors. Sourcing engines for these ships presented difficulties. At least the first six were powered by steam engines, the first two by Hudong-built 5 cylinder engines of the uniflow type, but these were not repeated in the later ships. At least another two were powered by Canadian-sourced steam engines, possibly taken from scrapped warbuilds. The last pair, Jian She and Tuan Jie seem to have been delivered directly to China Ocean Shipping Company (COSCO) for international service and are not known to have actually borne 'Hoping' names, but for completeness, their details are appended after the 'Heping' section:

Hoping 25 (Dalian 1959), later Heping, then Hong Qi 163

Hoping 28 (Jiangnan 1958), later Zhandou 28, then Heping 28

Hoping 58 (Jiangnan 1959), later You Yi, then Zhandou 58

Hoping 71 (Dalian 1961), later Liao Yuan, then Hong Qi 164, then Zhandou 25

Hoping 72 (Jiangnan 1960), later Zhandou 72, then Heping 72

Hoping 77 (Dalian c.1962), later Xian Feng, later Zhandou 77, then Heping 77

Jian She (Jiangnan 1964)

Tuan Jie (Dalian 1964).

Also built in China (in 1959-60) were around twelve 3,500 dwt size 'Khasan' Class derivatives, mainly steamships:

Hoping 49 (Shanghai Shipyard 1959), later Zhandou 49

Hoping 56 no details available

Hoping 57 (Dalian 1959) no details available

Hoping 59 (Hudong 1959), later Zhandou 59, then Xin Hua 59 then Lu Hai 1 (motorship)

Hoping 60 (Hudong 1959), later Zhandou 60 (motorship)

Hoping 62 (Hudong 1959), later Zhandou 62

Hoping 63 (Hudong 1960), later Zhandou 63

Hoping 64 (Hudong 1960), later Zhandou 64, then Heping 64

Hoping 65 (Hudong 1959), later Zhandou 65, then Heping 65

Hoping 66 (Hudong 1960), later Zhandou 66

Hoping 67 (Hudong 1960), later Zhandou 67

Unidentified Hoping 68, perhaps the vessel that became Zhe Hai 1 (Zhonghua 1960), later Zhe Hai 91

Unidentified Hoping 69, perhaps the vessel that became Zhe Hai 2 (Zhonghua 1960), later Zhe Hai 92.

Simultaneously China returned to the international secondhand market. Groundwork had been laid in 1957 by registration in Hong Kong of several flag-of-convenience entities: Ocean Tramping Co. Ltd (27 May), Peninsular Shipping Co. Ltd (14 June) and Hemisphere Shipping Co. Ltd (28 September). In 1958, when, following the end of the Suez boom, when prices had fallen to low levels, the PRC became the world's leading buyer, especially for the cheaply available 10,000-dwt warbuilt freighters. Some ships intended for worldwide trading were placed under these flag-of-convenience entities – from April 1960 also including Yick Fung Shipping & Enterprises Co. Ltd – while others were promptly transferred to the Chinese flag, for the most part in either the 'Hoping' or the Guangzhou-based 'Nan Hai' series.

During the Cultural Revolution, the "Revolutionary" stance of building ships in China and the "Capitalist Roadster" stance of buying cheap secondhand ships from abroad became an issue of serious political debate. It was the focus of a clash between Madame Mao and Deng Xiao-ping at a Politburo meeting in October 1973, Jiang Qing criticizing purchases as manifesting a "slavish comprador philosophy," and pointing to the Feng Qing, a new 10,000 ton cargo ship designed and built in China, as a symbol of Mao's policy of self-reliance and national independence. There were many such factional clashes, reflected sometimes in slogans painted on the ships, in addition to the routine ones praising Chairman Mao. Purchases from abroad continued to remain important, especially in the succeeding Deng era.

International Trading

In terms of international voyaging, the flag of convenience vessels continued to play an important role, but on 27 April 1961, China Ocean Shipping Company (COSCO) was founded as the PRC's premier international ocean shipping company. In the early years 'Hoping' and 'Zhandou' vessels were sometimes chartered to COSCO for overseas voyages, and their funnels were normally repainted in buff, with the red and yellow insignia of COSCO, and transliteration of their names written in Roman lettering. In later years ships passing to COSCO were renamed, and if they returned to the SMB the reverse applied - they were repainted in black and given 'Zhandou' names.

The COSCO head office was located in Beijing but at the beginning Guangzhou was the principal operational branch, Shanghai being established on 1 April, 1964. In its first year COSCO acquired the motor passenger liners Guang Hua (14,216/30) and Xin Hua (2335/42 ex Sigurd Jarl), as well as coasters Hoping ('Peace', 5024/57 ex Hoping 25) and You Yi ('Friendship', 4882/59, ex Hoping 58), and then proceeded to build up its own fleet. Shanghai-based 'Hoping' vessels were almost entirely coal-fired and therefore less suitable for this purpose but in June 1964 the new Chinese-built motorship

Hoping 60 took an inaugural sailing to Nampo, North Korea and Liao Yuan, a steamer, commenced regular sailings to Japanese ports.

In 1962 the COSCO passenger steamer Zhong Hua (built as a 'Liberty' and under conversion in 1960 – see Hoping 54 bis) was exchanged for the SMB steamer Hoping 54 in an arrangement whereby both ships were temporarily transferred to Polish Ocean Lines and reflagged in order to pass safely through the Taiwan Straits. Another two-way transfer may have occurred in 1961 when a modern Polish vessel was added to the SMB fleet for a short period as Hoping 50, and the Hoping 25 and Hoping 58 were moved south to the COSCO fleet.

Ship Names

Regarding ship names, in both the Shanghai 'Hoping' and Guangzhou 'Nan Hai' fleets, the allocation of numbers seems to have been somewhat haphazard. There was an underlying chronological sequence that intersected initially with size, then with block allocations for Eastern-bloc and domestic newbuilds. A complication is that numbers of old vessels no longer in service were sometimes re-assigned to newer secondhand ones. Where this is known to have occurred, the newer vessel is informally indicated in our list by 'bis' but it is possible that a few original vessels have been missed. With one or two exceptions, these international secondhand 'Hoping's were each of around 10,000 dwt. Some smaller vessels, such as all the N3 'Hoping's, were then transferred to the shortsea 'Zhe Hai' fleet.

In November 1966 at the start of The Great Proletarian Cultural Revolution, the Central Government began to issue determinations that Chinese merchant ships should be renamed with revolutionary names, and the surviving 'Hoping' ('Peace') ships were renamed in the 'Zhàndòu' ('Combat') series. In most cases the numbers seems to have remained unchanged but a renewed round of secondhand purchases in the 1970s repeated old numbers, while there also seems to have been a few swapovers. The fleet did not grow greatly in overall size.

Deng Xiao-ping's accession to power in 1978 quickly resulted in major changes to China's shipping arrangements, as the bans on private shipowning and the raising of capital for commercial purposes were lifted, and this marked the beginning of the end of the 'Zhandou's. In 1985 a review led to many 'Zhandou' ships being transferred to other ownerships and the remaining vessels reverted to 'Heping' names, using the new Pingyin romanisation. The 'Heping' fleet was gradually run down and no longer exists as such.

Addition of 'Qian Shao' Series

In 1956 the 'Hoping's were supplemented by perhaps four small vessels based in Zhejiang (Chekiang) Province with 'Qian Shao' names. The translation of this compound is 'Outpost' or in a maritime context, 'Outport'. From the evidence, the system whereby all the ships were managed from Shanghai had soon shown shortcomings, particularly in the need for ports such as Ningbo and Wenzhou in Zhejiang to be able to manage ships in a timely way to respond to local needs as they arose. Zhejiang is a major producer of rice, wheat, jute, cotton and fishery products, but imports coal. Because of its geographic circumstances the province had a rich maritime history, producing some of the best of China's steamship owners such as Yu Ya-ching, C.Y. Tung, W.H. Eddie Hsu, and Y.K. Pao, and the imposed central monopoly controlled by Shanghai must have been irksome. What resulted seemed to be a partial concession as the 'Qian Shao' name shows – the office in Ningbo became an “outport” of the Shanghai apparatus, presumably staffed by Shanghai Bureau personnel, but at least some ships were now physically based in and controlled from Zhejiang.

Qian Shao 1 remains unidentified, but Qian Shao 2 and Qian Shao 3, mentioned above, were of the 'Tissa/Telnovsk' class of 1200 gt cargo ships being built in Budapest by Gheorghiu Dej, under Comintern arrangements. The smaller Qian Shao 4 was a Japanese warbuilt.

Change to 'Zhe Hai'

The four 'Qian Shao's were supplemented in 1960 by two 2400gt vessels newly built at the Zhonghua Shipyard in Shanghai. In place of the very plain 'Qian Shao' names, they were given 'Zhe Hai' names – 'Hai' traditionally being used by China Merchants to indicate seagoing cargo ships - signifying a sphere of operations extending beyond Zhejiang Province. A number of small intra-province passenger ships were given 'Zhejiang' names. Zhejiang's favoured 'Zhe Hai' naming system withstood the turmoil of the Cultural Revolution, and it was applied to the 'Qian Shao's and eventually to a large number of bulk carriers acquired by the newly formed Zhejiang Shipping Company and others post-1978. 'Zhe Hai'-named ships now form a significant element of PRC shipping, but these post-state owned enterprise vessels are not listed here.

The 'Zhe Hai' naming system usually involves the ship having a three digit number, the first of which indicates a broad category, the full import of which is not currently known to us. The numbers 1, 3, 5 and 7 are applied to cargo ships, and the numbers 4, 6 and 8 are for passenger ship types. A notable one of a kind vessel was the Zhe Hai 303, built as the British collier Belltoy in 1918 and seen still active in bringing a coal (?) cargo into Shanghai in July 1982. This ship is known to have been operated by the Chung Hsing Public-Private Partnership in 1952-54, and may have enhanced its longevity by sailing for many years in the salt-free Yangtse water encountered on the Pukow-Shanghai run which, from the early 20th century, was a preferred route for delivering Chung Hsing coal.

Notes on Research

It has taken patient, forensic detective work over several decades to assemble this still imperfect document. The 'Hoping'/'Zhandou' ships were very poorly recorded in Lloyd's Register, often omitted, listed under PRC by their former names, or, when listed, by spelling out the 'Hoping' number, and then sometimes in error. Talbot Booth, based on the direct observations of crew members of ships visiting China, was more usually more reliable, but with only very little detail. In June 1991 more detailed lists of PRC ships, evidently drawing upon Chinese sources, were published in Tokyo by Akishige Akaiwa, but even these have shortcomings. Chinese internet sites, particularly the former site operated by 'Ville de Tanya', have provided some more information about particular ships. We thank Risto Brzoza for drawing our attention to the article 'Black Sisters from Turku' by Rami Wirrankosi published in the Finnish LAIVA magazine in February 2020. This provides valuable photographs and information regarding the 'Khasan' class.

We first recorded details, including of the short-lived China People's fleet as recorded in Lloyd's Register, in Dick & Kentwell, Sold East: Traders, Tramps and tugs of Chinese Waters (1991). Since then we have been able gradually to compile and illustrate a 'Hoping'/'Zhandou'/'Heping' list. In doing so, we have been greatly assisted by Bill Schell and Charles Dragonette and by China coast photographers such as Chris Mackey, Markus Berger, Donald Anderson, Karsten Petersen, George Wilson, Leroy Demery Jr and Harrison Forman. Acknowledgements are included with each photograph. Such photographs, often taken surreptitiously in Shanghai and elsewhere on the China Coast, have sometimes been the only evidence, but identification has been a challenge, especially for standard war-built tonnage.

The lists still have gaps and no doubt some errors. In the early 1970s several old 10,000 dwt vessels were registered with names in the 'Zhandou 90' series, evidently to undertake coal shipments, but soon disappeared and apart from a couple of photographs, details are missing. As well, some of the original allocations may have become vacant and filled by other ships such as Jardine Matheson's Tak Sang, for which the new Chinese name is not known. We would welcome advice, updates and additional photos, identified or otherwise.

HOPING and ZHANDOU are each words consisting of two characters. In both cases the characters are in the form of a compound, constituting a single word, and we reflect this in the one-word romanisation, as does Lloyd's Register, not 'HO PING', 'ZHAN DOU' or 'HE PING' as appearing in many other non-Chinese sources.

In 1958 the Wade-Giles romanisation of HOPING was officially replaced by the Pingyin romanisation of HEPING. To avoid cluttering the lists, here we simply show names as HOPING until the batch of 1985 HEPING renamings.

The HOPING/ZHANDOU/HEPING series are listed numerically. Where a number is known to have been re-used, the second ship is identified by the word 'bis'.

Chinese numbers are romanised (as per LR) as 1 I, 2 ER, 3 SAN, 4 SSU, 5 WU, 6 LIU, 7 CHI, 8 PA, 9 CHIU, 10 SHI, then 11-19 as SHI (X), 20 as ERR SHI and 20+ as ERR SHI I, etc. Early 'Hoping' ships bore the number in Chinese characters (read L to R) but by the 'Zhandou' era numerals only were used.

和平 HOPING 'Peace' LIST (names used until the end of 1966)

Unidentified or perhaps unallocated HOPING numbers are 56, 68, 69, 74, 78 and 80 onwards. It also may be deduced that numbers 27, 29, 30, and 34 were first allocated to other ships around 1956, but we have no details.

浙海 ZHE HAI (CHE HAI) 'Zhejiang Sea' SERIES (1960+ excluding vessels acquired from 1980 and passenger ships)

ZHE HAI cargo ships are in the ZHE HAI 1, ZHE HAI 91, ZHE HAI 101, ZHE HAI 301, ZHE HAI 501 and ZHE HAI 701 series. Ports of registration include Ningpo and Wenzhou in Zhejiang Province to the south of Shanghai and Haimen. The detailed listing below covers known vessels acquired to the end of 1979, but not beyond. The known details of subsequent ships, all believed to be of the engines-aft type, may conveniently be checked on international databases, such as at the Miramar site <<https://www.miramarshipindex.nz/>>.

ZHE HAI passenger ships are known to be in the ZHE HAI 401, ZHE HAI 601 and ZHE HAI 801 numbered series. ZHE HAI passenger ships as well as the ZHE JIANG series passenger ships are covered in a separate Shanghai Maritime Bureau passenger ship list and excluded from the listing below.

As with HOPING/ZHANDOU/HEPING list, the listing up to 1980 is not strictly chronological, but by name and number.

ZHE HAI 1 (1960-6?) 2400/60

Built by Zhonghua Shipyard, Shanghai as ZHE HAI 1 (also known as CHE HAI 1). Presumably soon renamed ZHE HAI 91 to avoid confusion with HOPING-numbered vessel. 1982 still existing. NFI.

ZHE HAI 1 being launched by Zhonghua Shipyard (Shanghai) in 1960. This only photo, yellowed with age, was bought on a Chinese internet auction site nearly 60 years later (SK*).

ZHE HAI 2 (1960-6?) 2400/60

Built by Zhonghua Shipyard, Shanghai as ZHE HAI 2 (also known as CHE HAI 2). Presumably soon renamed ZHE HAI 92 to avoid confusion with HOPING-numbered vessel. 1982 still existing. NFI.

1969+ Talbot-Booth (& possibly before). There are no other PRC sisterships with the MMFKM arrangement. Funnel is lower than in the Talbot-Booth sketches of similarly sized Chinese-built MKFKM profile HOPING 49, HOPING 65 and HOPING 66.

ZHE HAI 101 (196?-8?) (N3) Blt. by Butler in appearance in 1979 photo. Plausible match with CHENG HUO/HOPING 14.

Likely to be one of eight to ten CMSNC N3s that are known to have come under PRC control, four being documented at Canton (NAN HAIs 165, 175, 176 and 177). The other four to six being:

- CHIAO JEN 1873/45 Blt. by McCloskey (NAN HAI 163, then PLC Navy, 1967 stricken)
- CHENG HUO 1873/43 Blt. by Butler (1950s HOPING 14, NFI)
- HSUAN HUAI 1926/45 Blt. by Avondale (11/48 sunk in Liao River, Yingkou after fire, NFI)
- HUNG CHANG 1873/45 Blt. by McCloskey (1950 CPSNC, NFI (candidate for HOPING 16), RLR 1992)
- HOPING 16 (N3 listed in Talbot-Booth, NFI).
- INCHULVA 1953/43 Blt. by Butler (6/60 HOPING 77, RLR 1992)
